This week, Masterpiece London (<http://www.artnet.com/events/art-fairs/masterpiece-london-2/>) is taking England's capital by storm. The art fair covers a wide range of art, design, furniture, and jewelry, attracting collectors of every stripe and budget over the next seven days. Meanwhile, the city's local galleries are putting up some of their best work to coincide with the event, so let's take a look at what we have to recommend at the moment.

You can't go wrong with Carol Bove at David Zwirner (<http://www.artnet.com/galleries/david-zwirner/>), where the sculptor presents a range of large-scale works in her signature, tubular style. The show spans two floors of the gallery, offering visitors plenty of chances to experience Bove's investigations of materiality and form up close and personally—just resist the urge to clamber over the work like you're at a playground, no matter how tempting. For fresh inventive painting, Holly Coulis at Simon Lee (<http://www.artnet.com/galleries/simon-lee/>) is a great bet. Her still life compositions exist in neatly ordered, flattened spaces, offering an idiosyncratic approach to the genre that's punched up by Coulis' delightful sorbet palette. Then, be sure to stop by Sophia Contemporary Gallery \(http://www.artnet.com/galleries/sophia-contemporary-gallery/\), where Swedish artist Veronica Brovall is serving up fierce ceramic and steel pieces full of texture and personality. The titular work in the exhibition, Wear the Heat, is particularly memorable and exudes a powerful presence.

As always for London, it's a busy week for art lovers. Find artnet's full list of picks below.
